Congratulations

You have purchased one of the greatest satire magazines ever published. We have combined the most outstanding photographs and editorial talent ever assembled in order to bring you this startling, and often shocking, effect.

You realize, of course, that all photographs herein are not to believed; laughed at, yes; chuckled over, of course; shared with your friends, certainly—but definitely not to be believed! This exclusive pictorial study of a man who wielded unparalleled power and exerted tremendous influence over us and the policies of our country (if not the entire world!), is for you to enjoy—whether you were for or against him. Taking sides is not the issue here.

This magazine was created in the uniquely American tradition of good humor, of having the inalienable right to poke good, clean fun at those in public office; those who, day in and day out, make the rules and regulations by which we are constantly governed. As a matter of fact, we expect them to enjoy this magazine as much as you will, for the right to laugh at oneself, we feel, is as much theirs as ours. Everyone should laugh at himself at least once a day, whether he lives in a brownstone or a White House!

We advise you to save this magazine, as we sincerely believe it will one day be worth many times the price you paid for it. Indeed, it may well become a collector's item!

Thank you, and good laughing.

FUNNY PHOTOS FROM THEIR FAMILY ALBUM

A younger Pat and Dick camping it up at New York's Coney Island.

Pat's ballet lessons and Dick's muscle-building program were successful, judging by this athletic display at their Key Biscayne hideaway.

In a mock wedding ceremony, Dick gives Pat away to Tiny Tim. Tiny, reportedly, gave her right back.

FUNNY PHOTOS FROM THEIR FAMILY ALBUM

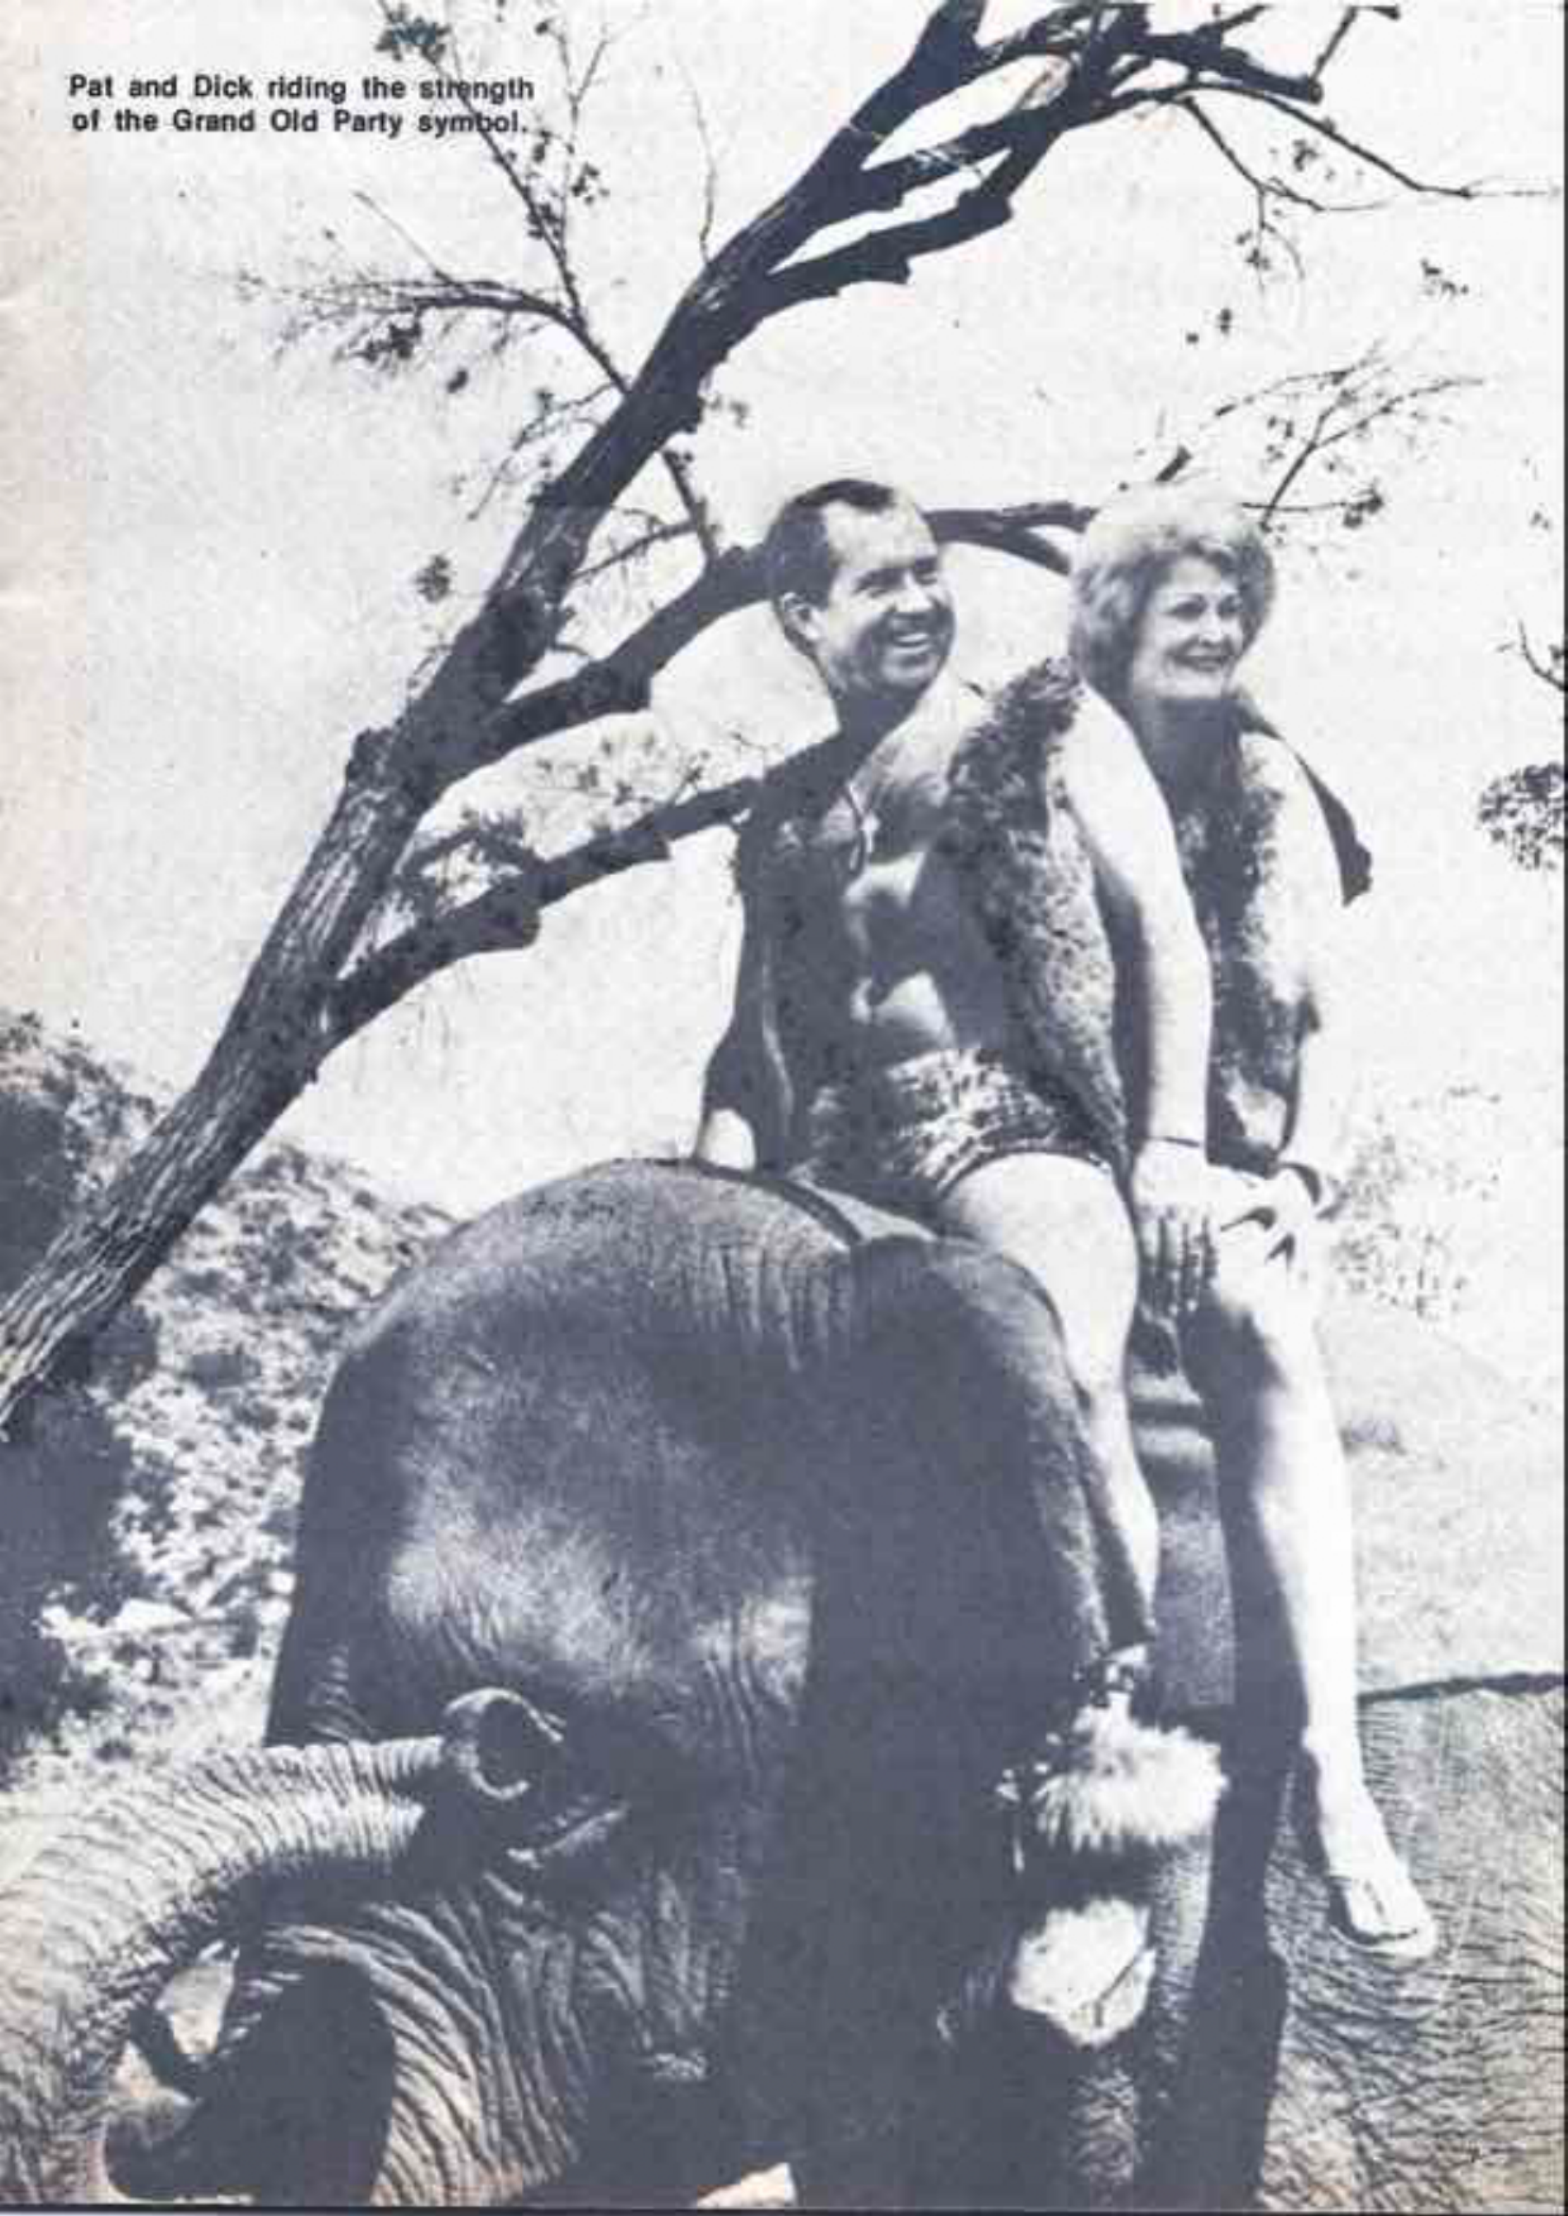
Caught with his pants down again, Nixon quickly explained to photographers that he really didn't forget them, that it was all a part of the costume party's theme. He was wearing, he insisted, the Emperor's Clothes!

Nixon's career as an actor almost took a turn for the worse when he incurred the wrath of the leading ape on Planet of the Apes movie set. "He tried to swipe my banana," the gorilla grunted. "I did not," Nixon is said to have replied. "There was a whole bunch there, and I simply went for the top banana!"

"Come Out!" was the theme song for placard-carrying parade through New York's Bicentennial streets. When Nixon came by in his centennial year, Nixon merely waved his stick and smiled.



Pat and Dick riding the strength of the Grand Old Party symbol.

We know it looks like a family squabble—or a barroom brawl—but pictures can be deceiving. Actually, it was another one of those nights when the booze flowed like water and souvenir hunters (head?) wanted something from Nixon to remember him by . . . as if he hadn't given them enough already!

SOME PIX OF PAT THAT NOBODY KNOWS SHOWS

(The Pleasure and Pain of Motherhood)

Pat and daughter Julie in a touching dinner scene in the blissful days before the White House years.

Administering her milk for human kindness, Pat does her thing for Vietnam orphans.

Pat Nixon before she went on a crash diet.

SOME PIX OF PAT THAT NOBODY KNOWS SHOWS

According to bestselling books on the subject, Pat took to hitting the bottle during the last hectic days *after Watergate.

Pat supposedly told newsmen she'd rather French kiss with an alligator than urge her husband to resign.

Pat takes to the campaign trail for Dick's re-election back in '72. She got off to a slow start, but, as history is proved, she was steady.

Before her husband managed to raise his salary (which was his first act upon taking office), Pat insisted on moonlighting as a cocktail waitress in order to make some extra money.

THE ANIMAL LOVERS

MAKING A MONKEY OUT OF A MOUSE

Nixon monkeys around during his lunch break from the set of Planet of the Apes. Once back at the studio, however, Nixon and the chimp reversed roles!

When others were in college, the fad was to swallow a live goldfish or two. Nixon, however, has always insisted on proving he's the one. When a rat eats a mouse, is that cannibalism?

THE FAMILY THAT PLAYS TOGETHER...!

There were reports that Pat and Tricia were arrested for taking part in a demonstration at the White House gates, but Pat later denied them. The chains, she said, were all part of the publicity stunt to keep her husband out of jail.

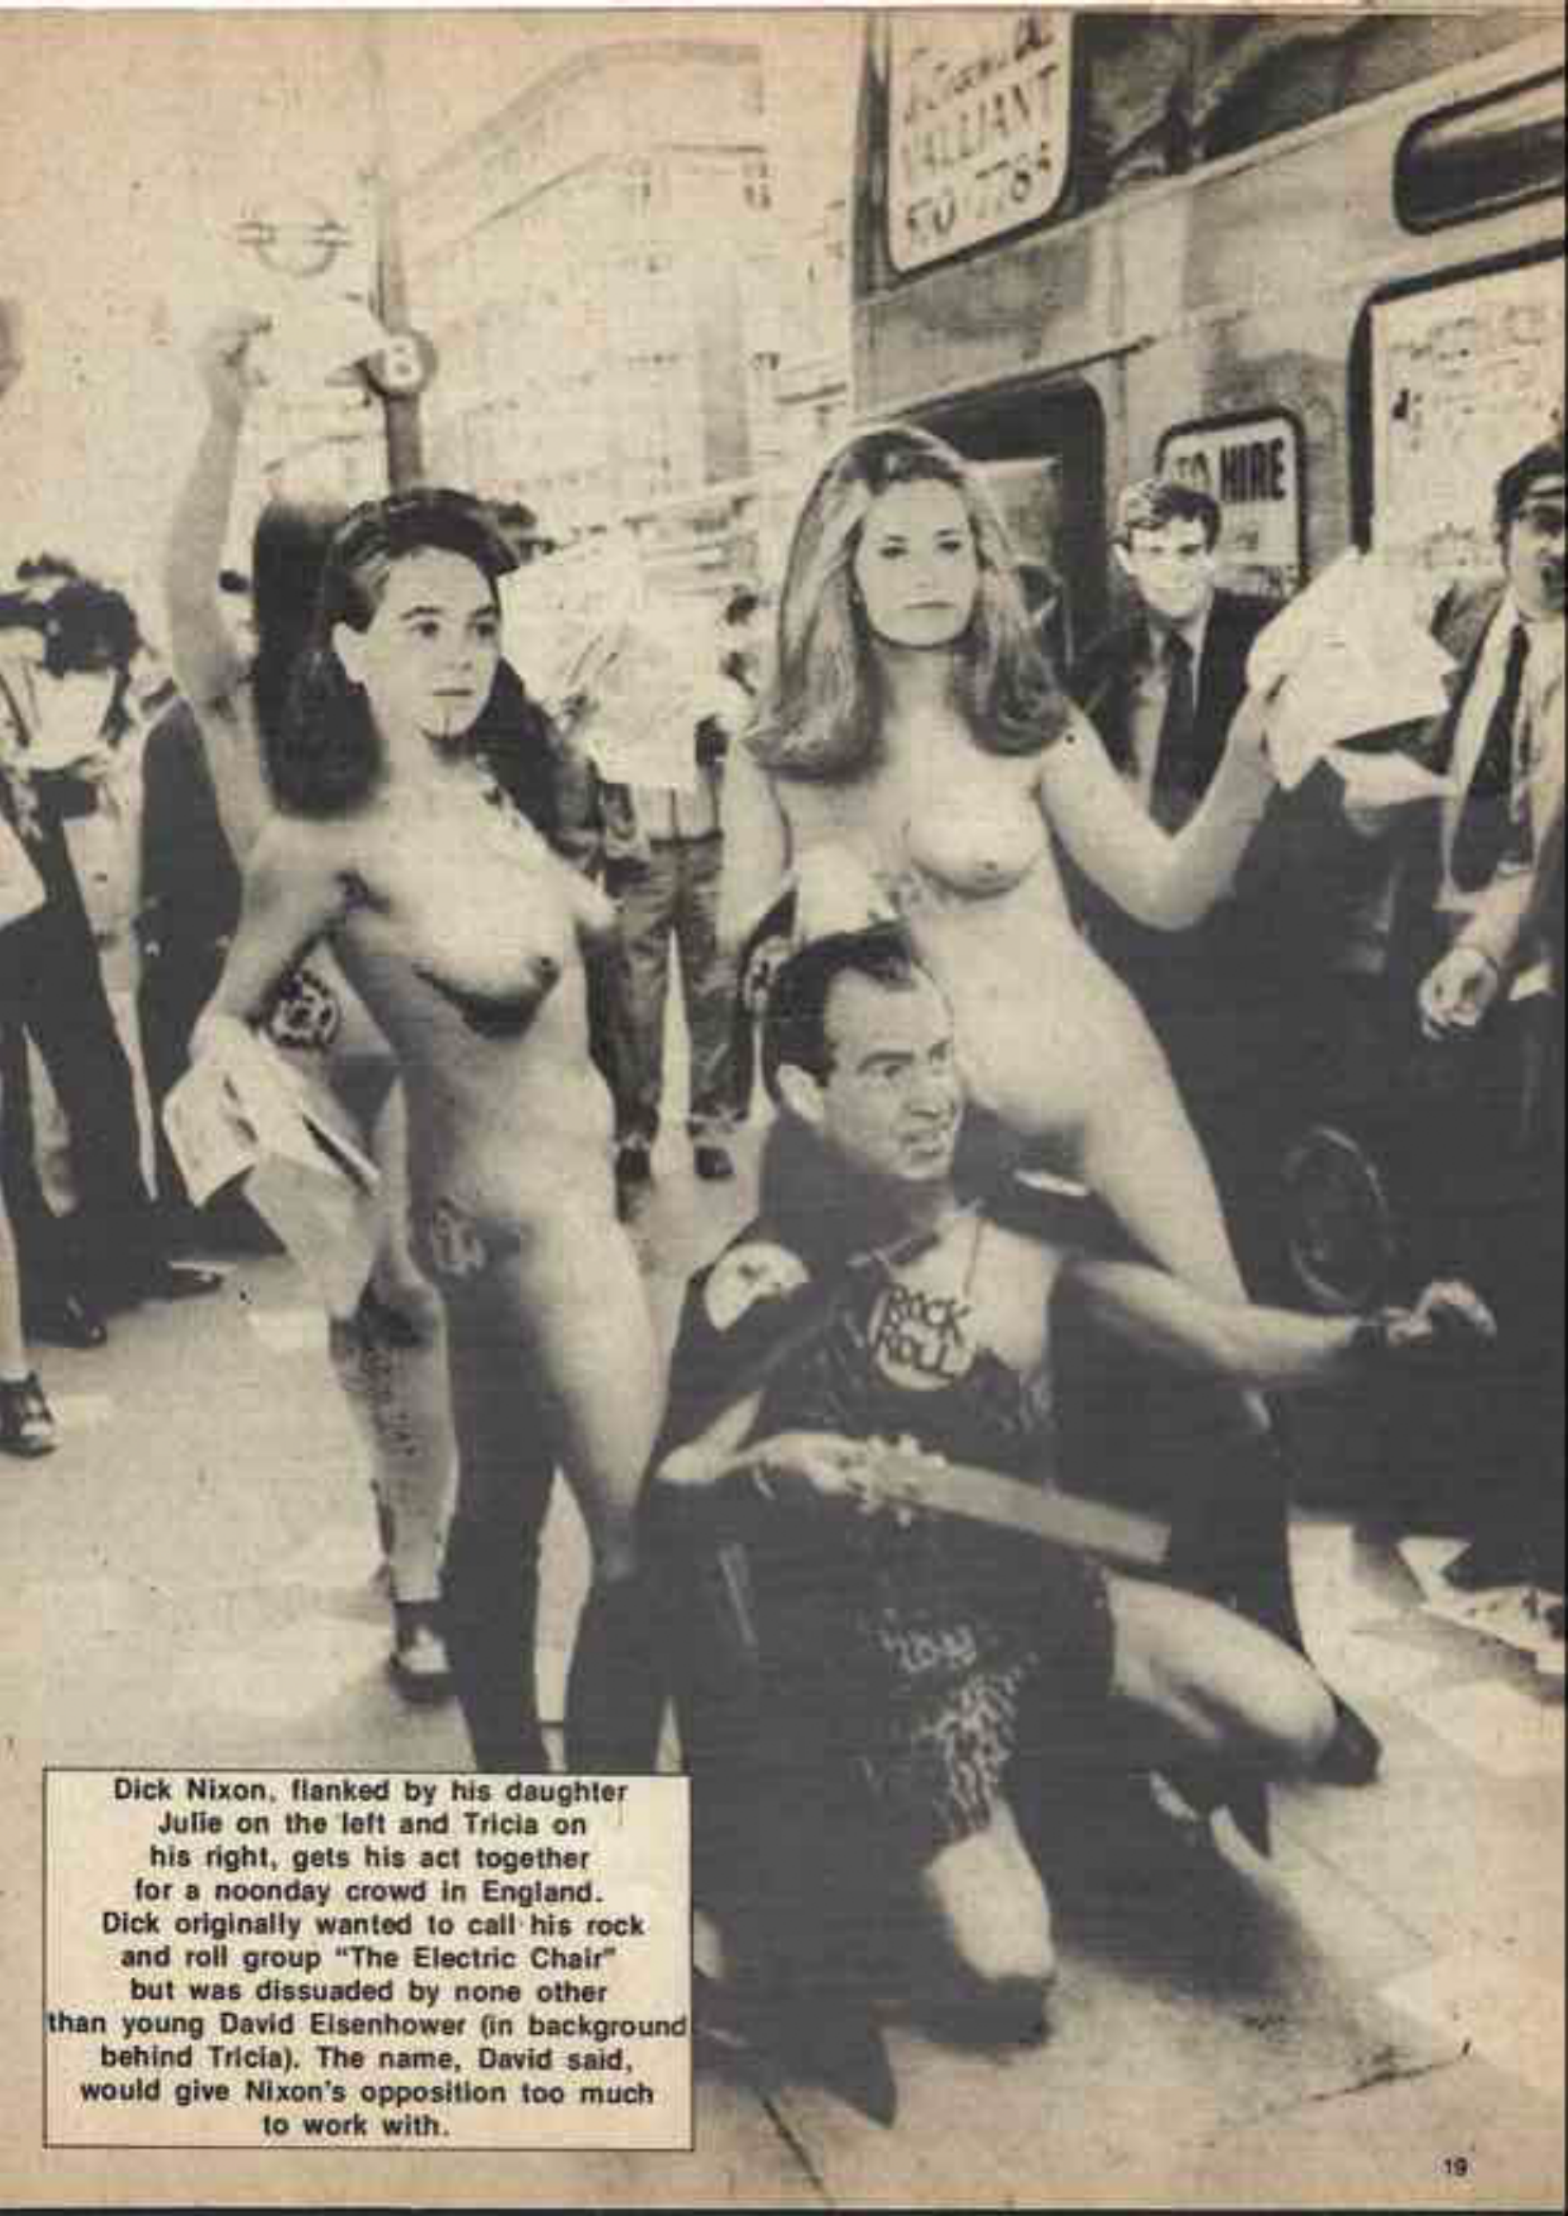
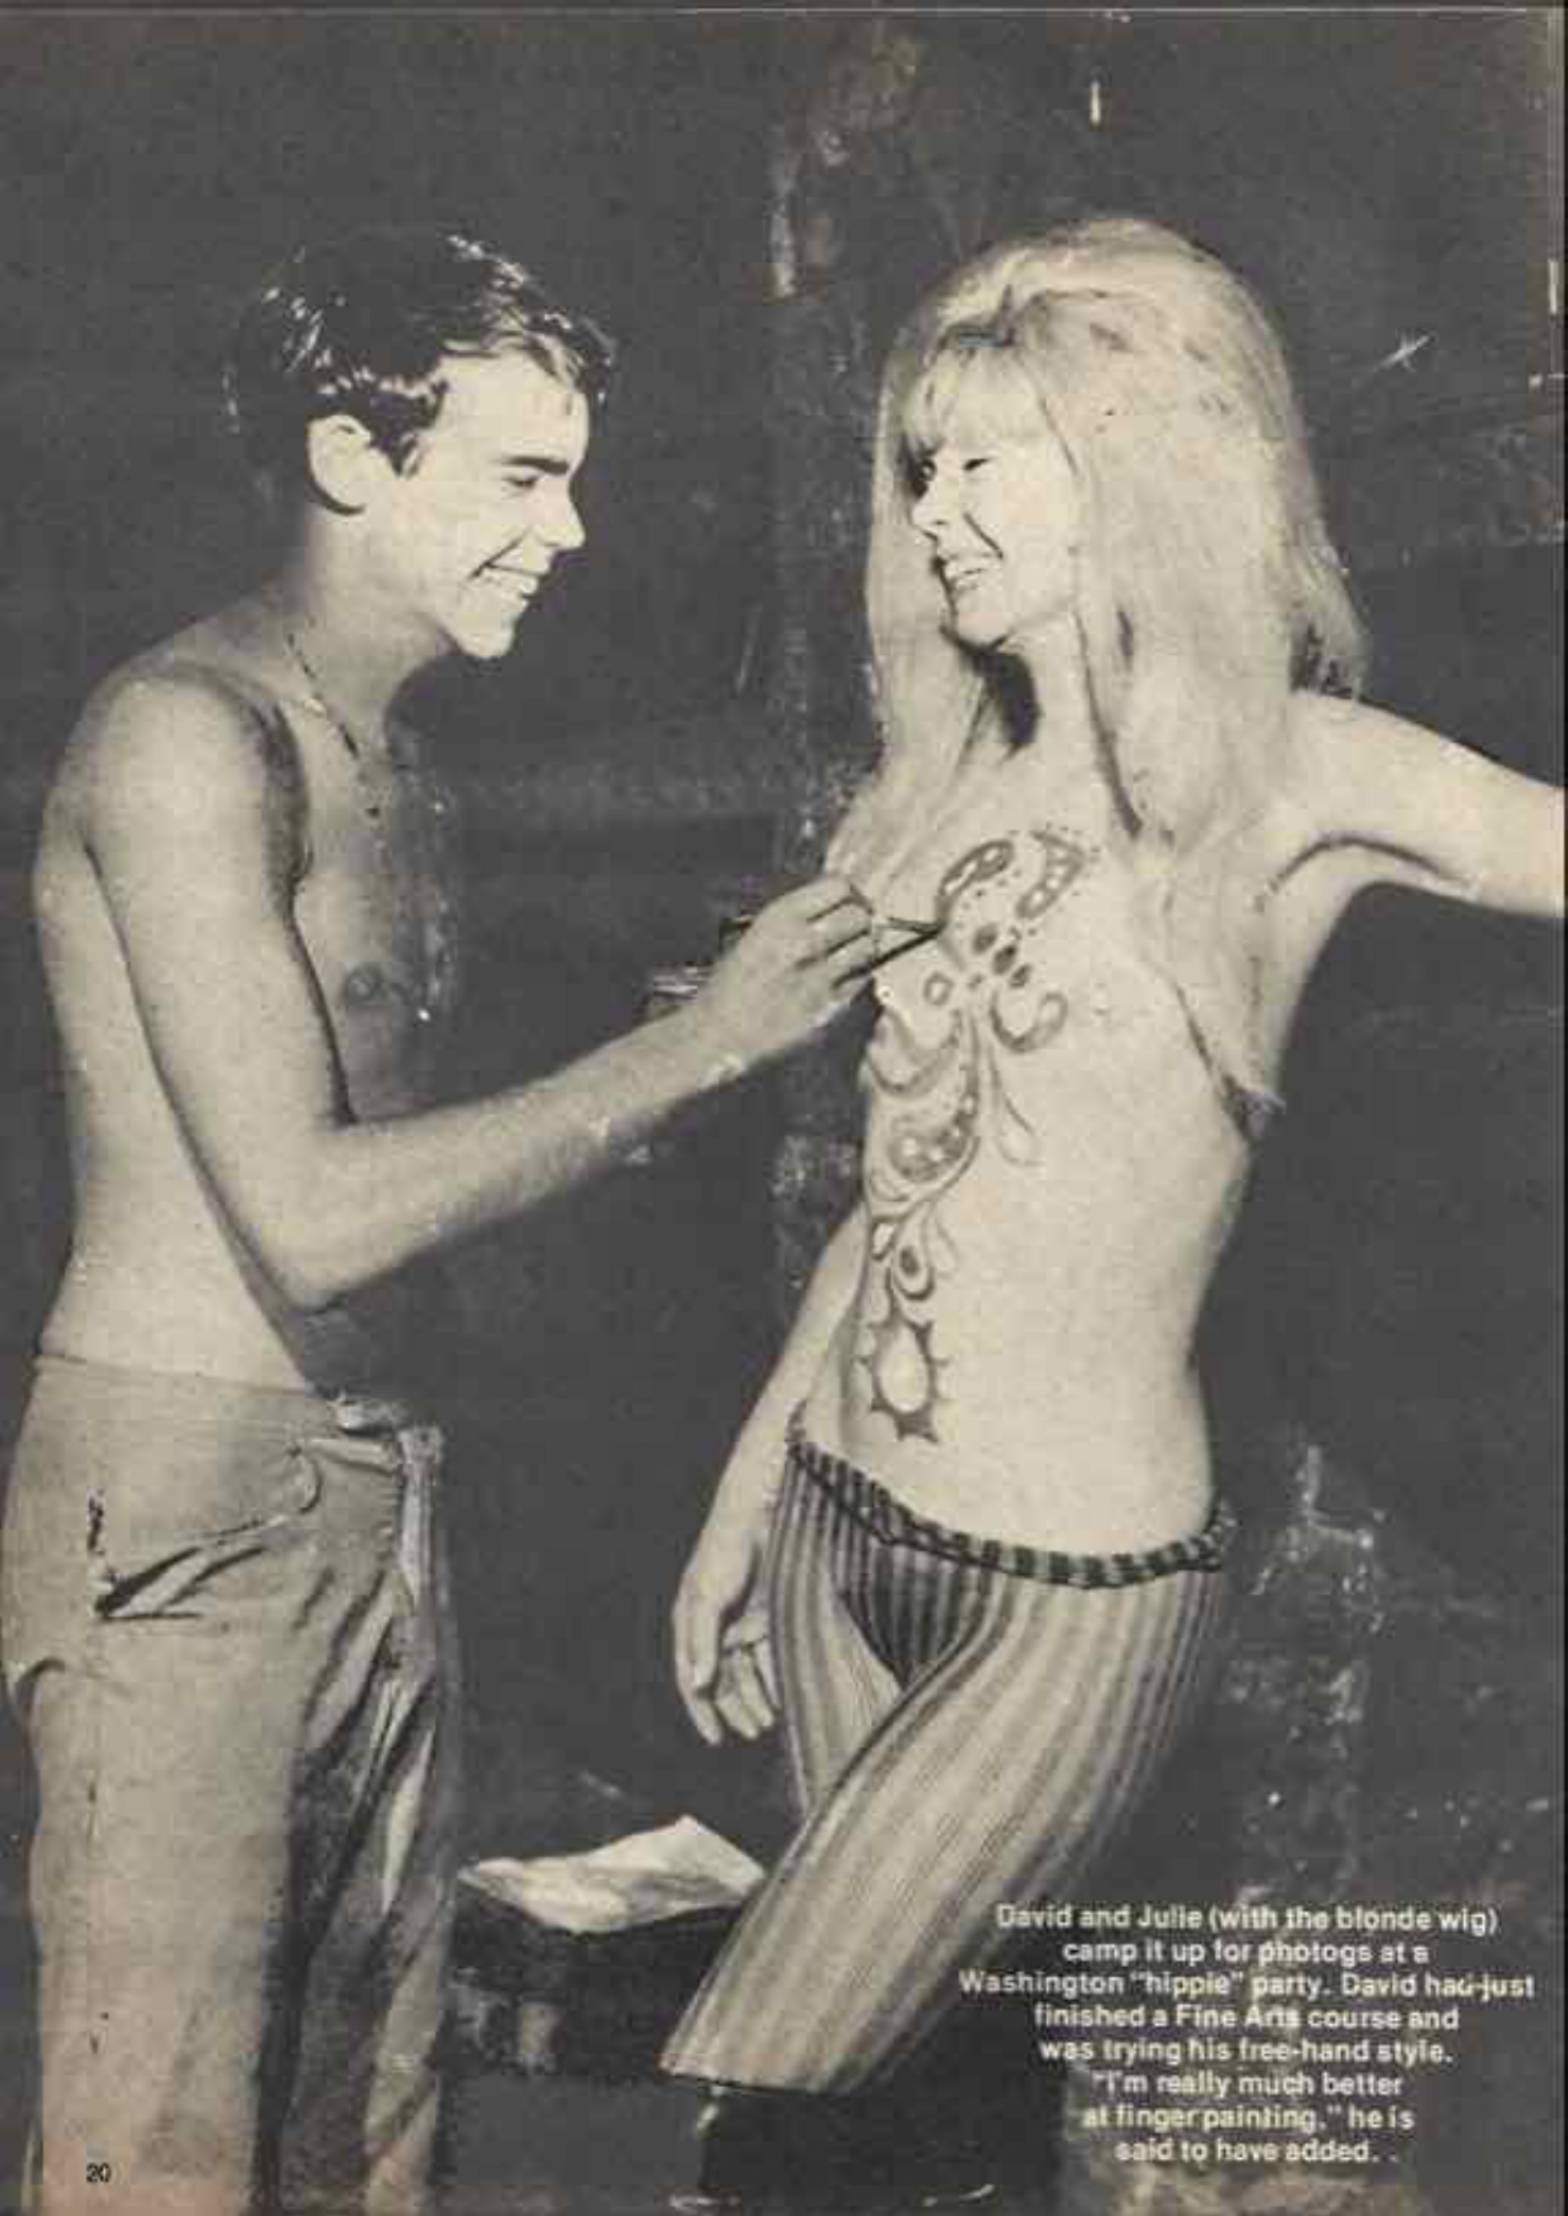
Pat and Julie picketing for Women's Lib group. Nixon's only complaint, it was said, was that they misspelled "Wits."



Dick Nixon, flanked by his daughter Julie on the left and Tricia on his right, gets his act together for a noonday crowd in England. Dick originally wanted to call his rock and roll group "The Electric Chair" but was dissuaded by none other than young David Eisenhower (in background behind Tricia). The name, David said, would give Nixon's opposition too much to work with.



David and Julie (with the blonde wig) camp it up for photogs at a Washington "hippie" party. David had just finished a Fine Arts course and was trying his free-hand style. "I'm really much better at finger painting," he is said to have added. .

Pat Nixon, with daughters Tricia (left) and Julie (right) during a belly dancing lesson. Pat was doing it, she said, to lose weight. Tricia and Julie said they were just keeping mom company.

LOVE LETTERS TO THE STARS

If Dick can have his alleged love letters, Pat can have her supposed affairs. Here, she's seen on the arm of rock star, Mick Jagger.

Pat Nixon, upset at the rumors that hubby, Dick, may have written love letters to other women, goes for a hand-in-hand stroll with Ringo Starr. With Ringo, of course, there's no evidence, because he doesn't write his feelings down, just sings them. Like, "I Want To Hold Your Hand."

LOVE LETTERS TO THE STARS

Whether or not those "love letters" are real, you have to think twice about this strange coupling. Nixon and Liz Tailor??? Maybe she just likes guys named Richard!

There were subtle rumors that Jane Fonda's beef against Nixon went further than just her anti-war program. Something to do with a breach of promise and a paternity suit . . .!

Although barely recognizable, that is the ex-president just behind Elton John. Dick said he wanted to learn as much about the rock field as he could because he was forming his own group once the Watergate affair blew over.

Not one to miss an opportunity for success, Nixon hangs around with Fonzie, just in case Pat's persuasive ways with Telly Savalas doesn't land him the job.

If Dick can pursue a career in the arts, so can Pat. Here she rehearses a scene with Peter O'Toole.

LOVE LETTERS TO THE STARS

Dick accompanies Never On Sunday star, Melina Mercouri during benefit for Greek repatriation.

Richard Nixon and protest folk singer, Joan Baez, in a rare hand-in-hand photo. It was reported that Joan was the recipient of some of those "love letters" Nixon is said to have written.

Patty Hearst and Nixon, out for a stroll on her father's lush estate. Reports had it that the Symbionese Liberation kidnappers were looking for Nixon, and not Patty, when they struck.

Tiny Tim accompanies Dick Nixon in their special rendition of "Tiptoe Through The Tulips."

Although Pat Nixon has come out against busing, she nonetheless plants a buss on a very willing Tiny Tim. Rumors had it that she and Tiny were very serious about each other.

THE MUSCLE BEHIND THE WHITE HOUSE

GETTING THE SOUTHERN VOTE

Save your Confederate money, suh, the South shall rise again. No, Nixon hasn't seceded from the Union (darn it!), but he has threatened to make another attempt at politics. This time, he says, he'll show his true colors. Confederate gray!

GAY RIGHTS CAN BE A DRAG!

In a rare stand on human rights, Nixon drags out a placard for Gay Power.

THE OUTDOOR NIXON

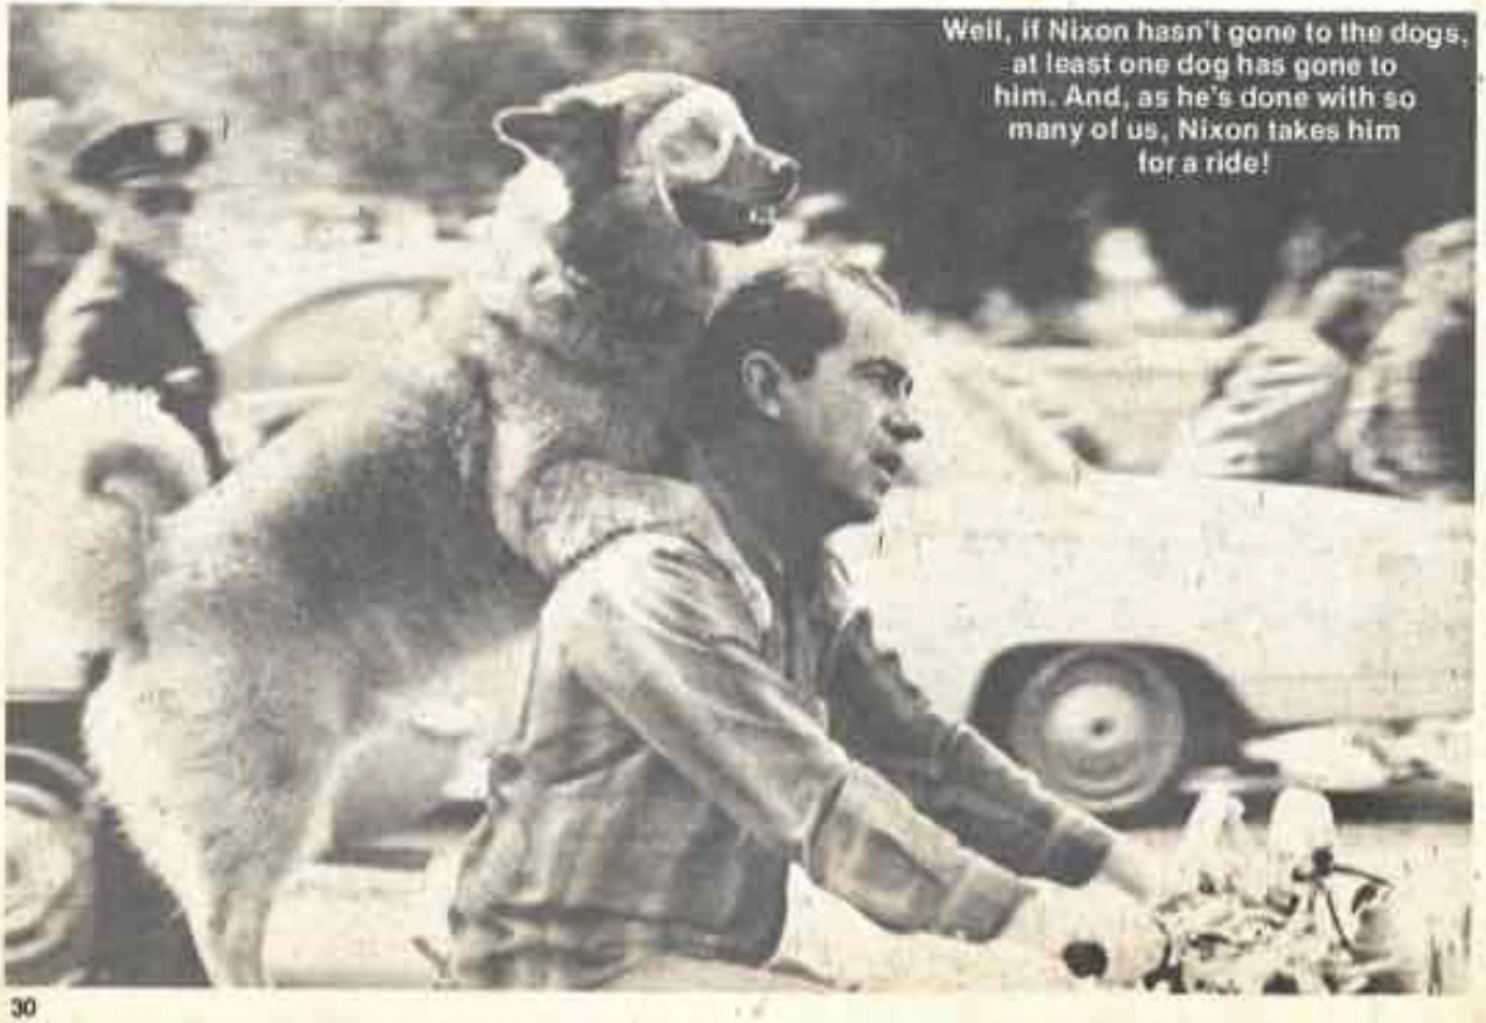
Nixon enjoying the pause that refreshes during 60-mile international bike race through California's countryside.



Well, if Nixon hasn't gone to the dogs, at least one dog has gone to him. And, as he's done with so many of us, Nixon takes him for a ride!

In a reported tryout for the Redskins' Over-the-hill Gang, Nixon carried the ball fairly well, but was dropped from the roster, nonetheless. The reason: he was really over-the-hill!

The King upon his throne!

"I AM THE PRESIDENT"

A past master at splitting his opposition, Nixon dribbles between pro basketballers, Rick Barry (left) and Kareem Abdul Jabbar during fund-raising benefit for the handicapped. Nixon, it was later reported, was the handicapped!

Dick Nixon looks down on Deep Throat star, Linda Lovelace with affected disdain. No wonder. He's made his public swallow a helluva lot more than she has!

Off to a running start? Nixon, attired in his usual "Emperor's Clothes" proves to a smiling Dr. Kissinger that he can run with the best of them and win.

SNAKE-BIT INTO A MARRIAGE . . . AND OTHER FOOLISHNESS!

"Till death us do part?"
By the looks on the faces of Nixon and (ahem) friend, Bebe Rebozo, they've strengthened their personal ties despite rumors of a rift. And who should witness this historic event? Why, none other than the man to whom
Nixon said, "I beg your pardon,"
President Gerald Ford!

Richard Nixon, looking as though he was snake-bit. Now really, would you buy a used car from this man?

From left to right: Lawyer, William Kunstler, Abbie Hoffman, Richard Nixon and Jerry Rubin, during demonstration outside the courthouse for the Chicago Seven. Dick said he didn't care for Abbie's fingering when it came to describing him as "Nixon's the one!"

During the gas crisis, Nixon promised to save the taxpayer's money by changing his mode of transportation to the White House. Close associates reportedly talked him out of it, saying that the public would never go for a tricycle-riding president.

UNIVERSITY SOUTHERN

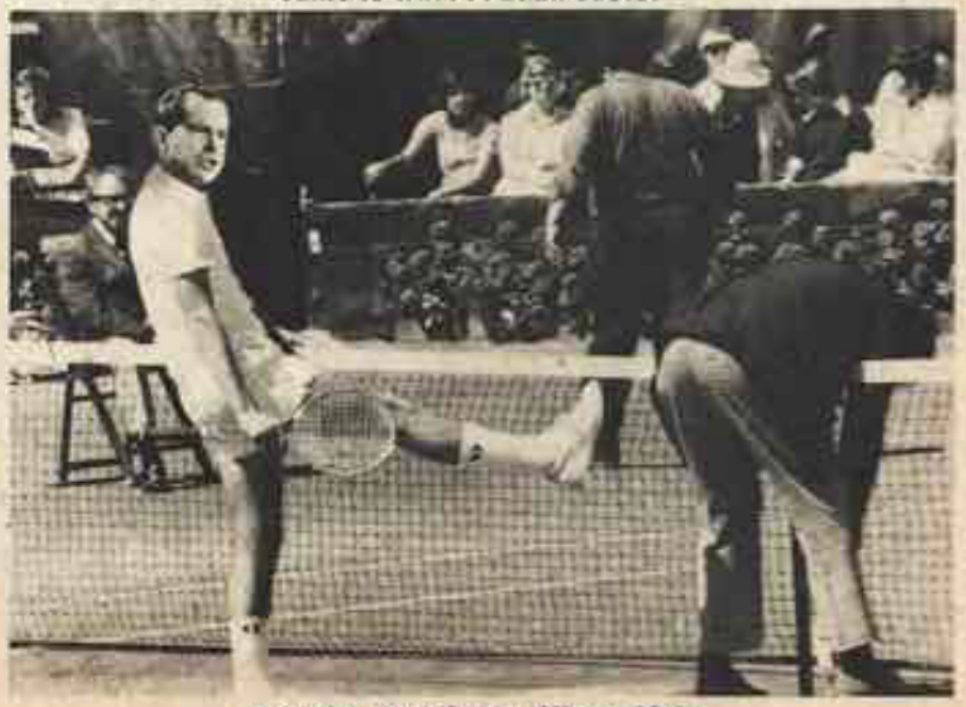
Nixon used to complain that, as president, he had the weight of the world on his shoulders. Here, Pat helps him work some of the tension off at their improvised gym at Key Biscayne.

Surprise! Which is exactly what Nixon did to close friends and family who planned a surprise birthday party for him, recently. "I am the precedent!" he is reported to have shouted, but horrified guests had already run out of the room, missing his faux pas entirely.

Nixon and Kissinger join Jane Fonda at an anti-war demonstration in California. The country's policy-makers said they wanted to show Fonda fans that they, too, wanted to get out of Vietnam.

Reports have it that Nixon got his nickname "Dirty Dick" from his earlier days fighting smokers. "Dirty Dick's" tactics were to take his opponent by surprise; they came to box, Nixon came to win . . . at all costs!



Ever the sore loser, Nixon kicks out at net judge for missing the point.

Nixon stated flatly that he had never contemplated suicide at any time. He was checking this coffin out, he said, only out of curiosity. "After what I've been through," he said, "I want to be sure my undertaker is the last one to let me down!"

During that toilet paper shortage scare,
a couple of years ago,
Nixon is said to have traveled with his own supply wherever he went.

KISSINGER COMES CLEAN!

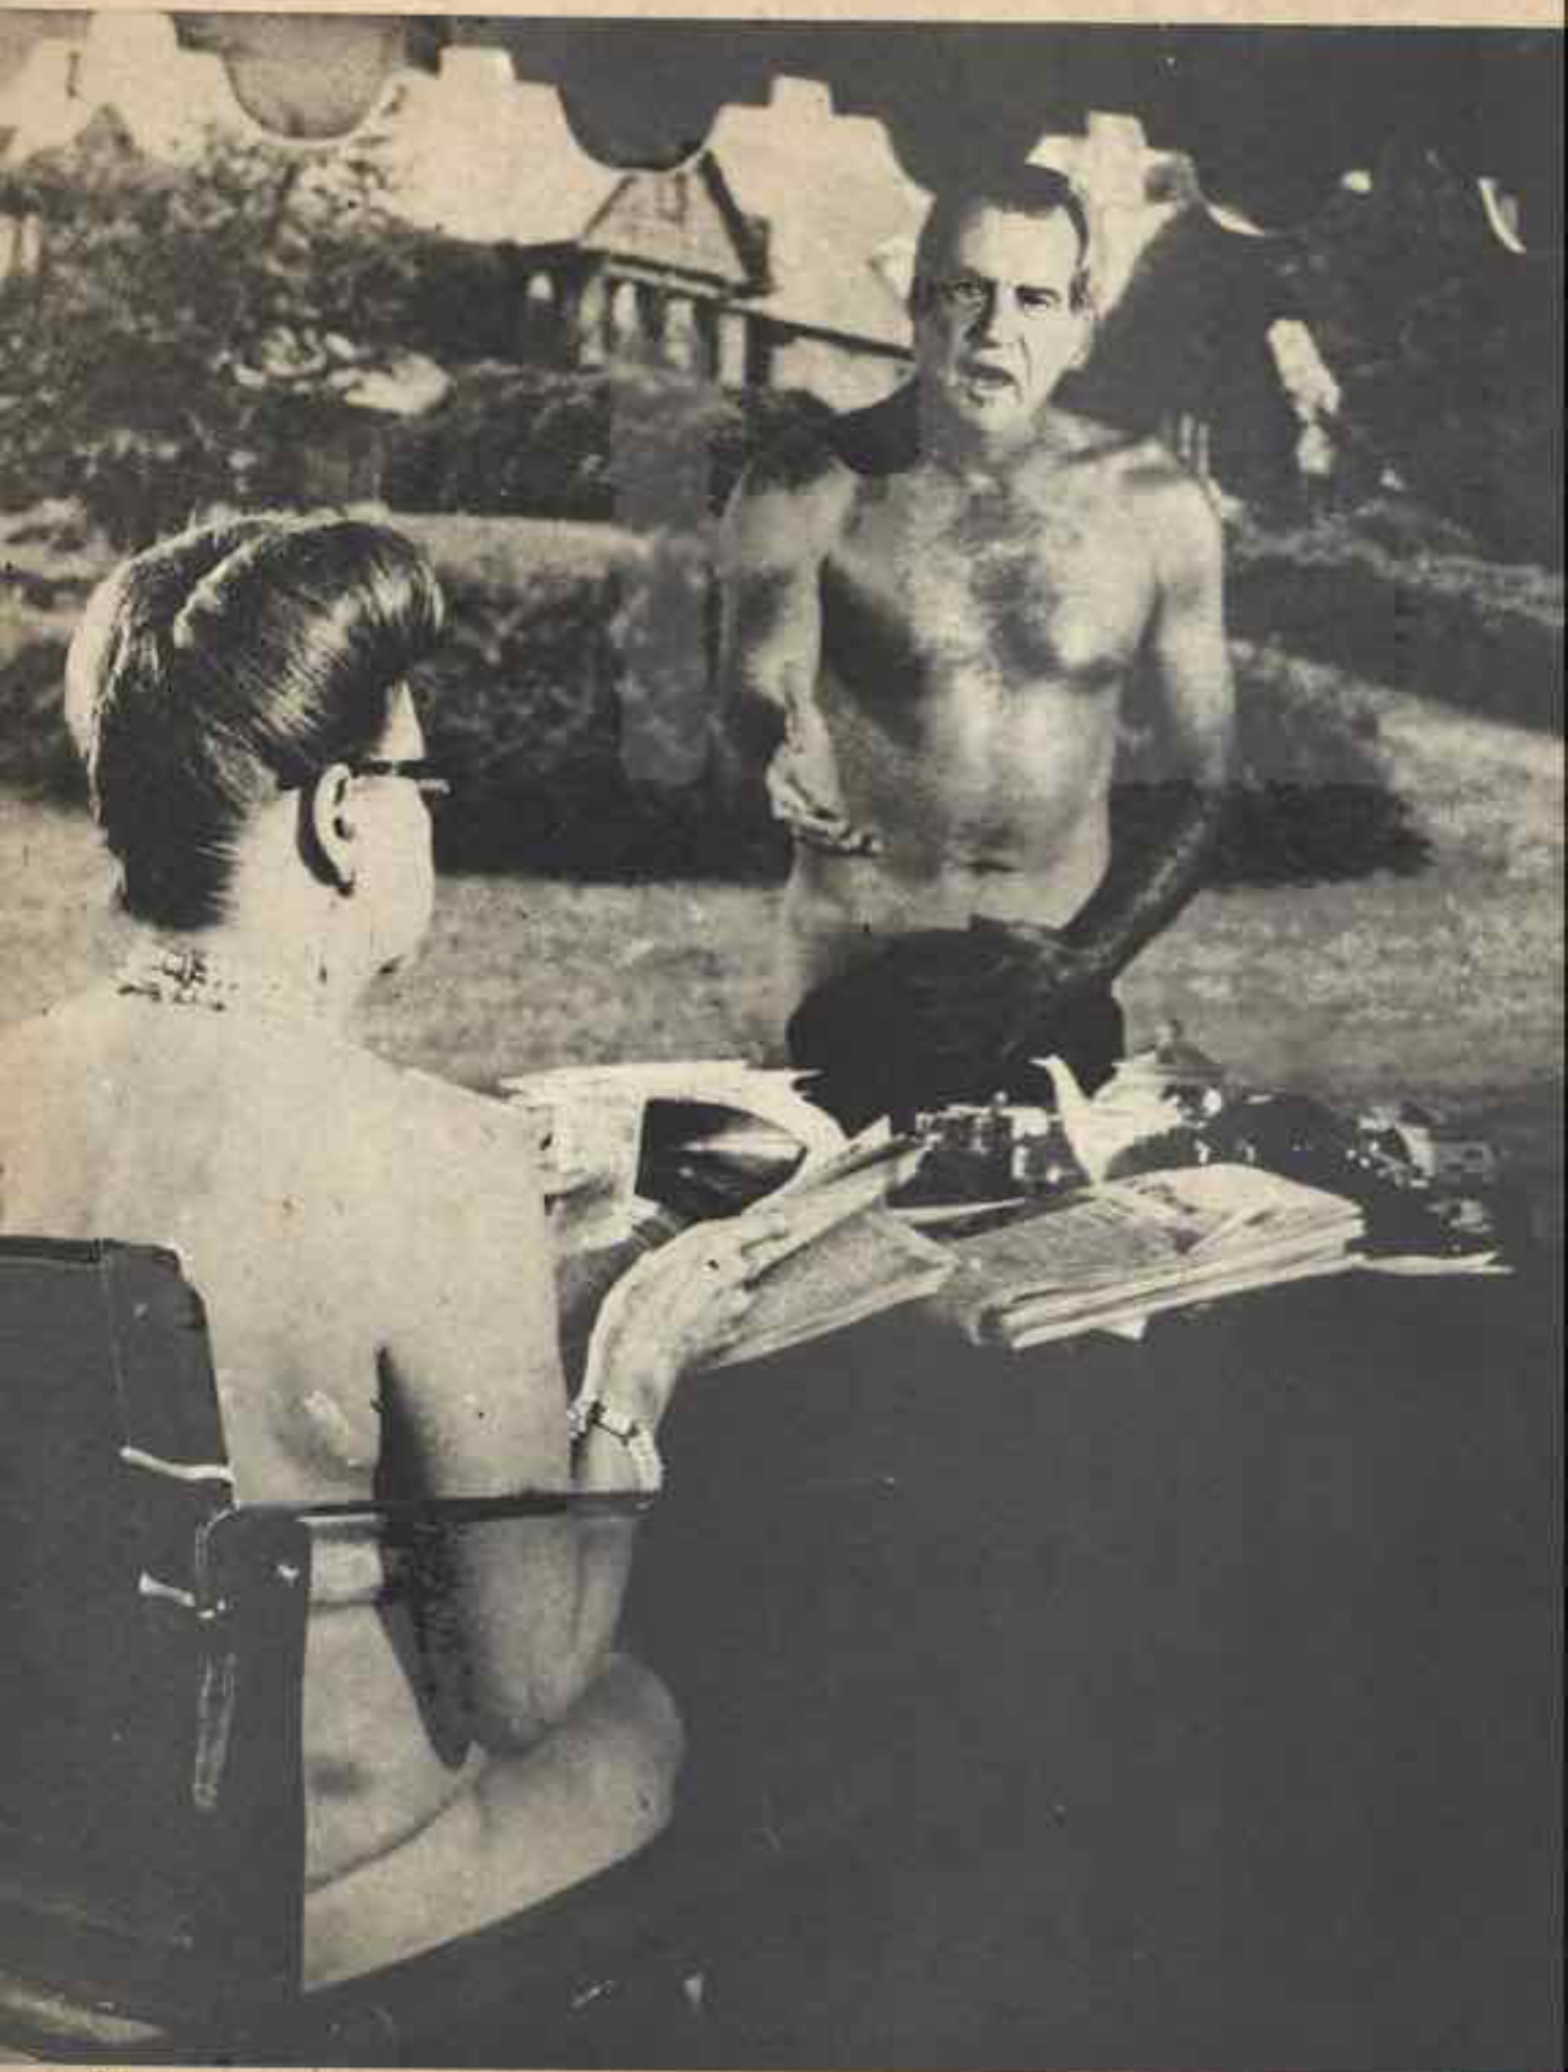
In flagrante delicto? Well, maybe not. The girl was being interviewed for a secretarial position, the Secretary of State said. To which the girl added, "I can, type!" too.



While Tricia does her number for a gala benefit at the White House, Henry Kissinger reportedly offered a helping hand. Tricia supposedly turned him down saying, "Thanks, but I have two of my own!" (Looks like four, from here.)

Nixon, pleading his cause to a reporter at a local nudist colony, while Dr. Kissinger looks on sympathetically. "I have absolutely nothing to hide," he is reported to have said. "Look, there's nothing up my sleeve."

HENRY, WHEN HE WAS KNEE-HIGH TO GOLDA!

Looks as though Dr. Kissinger is taking his title a little too seriously as Golda Meir looks on with obvious distrust. "Just what kind of doctor are you?" the Premier reportedly asked, cautioning him about that hand above the knee. Replied the good doctor, "Shhh, I just thank God I'm not a gynecologist!"

"Get out of here, you knee freak!" Golda allegedly told Kissinger during one of his many attempts to get a reflex action from her. Golda, disturbed at the liberties she felt the doctor was taking, said her leg extension was not reflex, but a front snap kick she had learned in a karate class.

Few people were aware of the effort Henry Kissinger made on behalf of the State Department while he was junketing from America to Egypt to Israel and points beyond. Dr. Kissinger insisted he alone shoulder all responsibility.

In order to prove to her opposition that she was in fine fettle, Israel's powerful Premier, Golda Meir, pulled a two-ton diesel truck with her teeth. She was overwhelmingly reelected and, despite rumors of a subsequent hernia and dental problems, finished out her term handily.

No, Golda is not clouting
Dr. Kissinger with the Indian club because of his defense of Egyptian policies.
Photo was taken as both attended a weight watcher's symposium at local health club.

A behind-the-scenes photo of Nixon and Kissinger trying to hold the GOP together!

If the worm can turn, the bull can toss the toreador. Here, the greatest bull-thrower of them all finds his tables turned in an incident down Mexico way, recently. Nixon, as usual, handled the situation with characteristic flair—from the seat of his pants!

NIXON, STILL THROWING THE BULL!

As you can see, everything came out in the end. Nixon was awarded the bull's ears for his matadorial splendor; the tail was later pinned on a Democrat who brayed at the performance.

OUR GANG!

From left to right: John Mitchell, H. R. Haldeman, Henry Kissinger, Richard Nixon and John Ehrlichman. The group gathered in response to accusations that they were running a police state. Insisted Nixon, "On the contrary; we're simply going over to the Watergate Hotel to make sure nobody bugs the Democrats!"

NIXON ON GUN CONTROL!

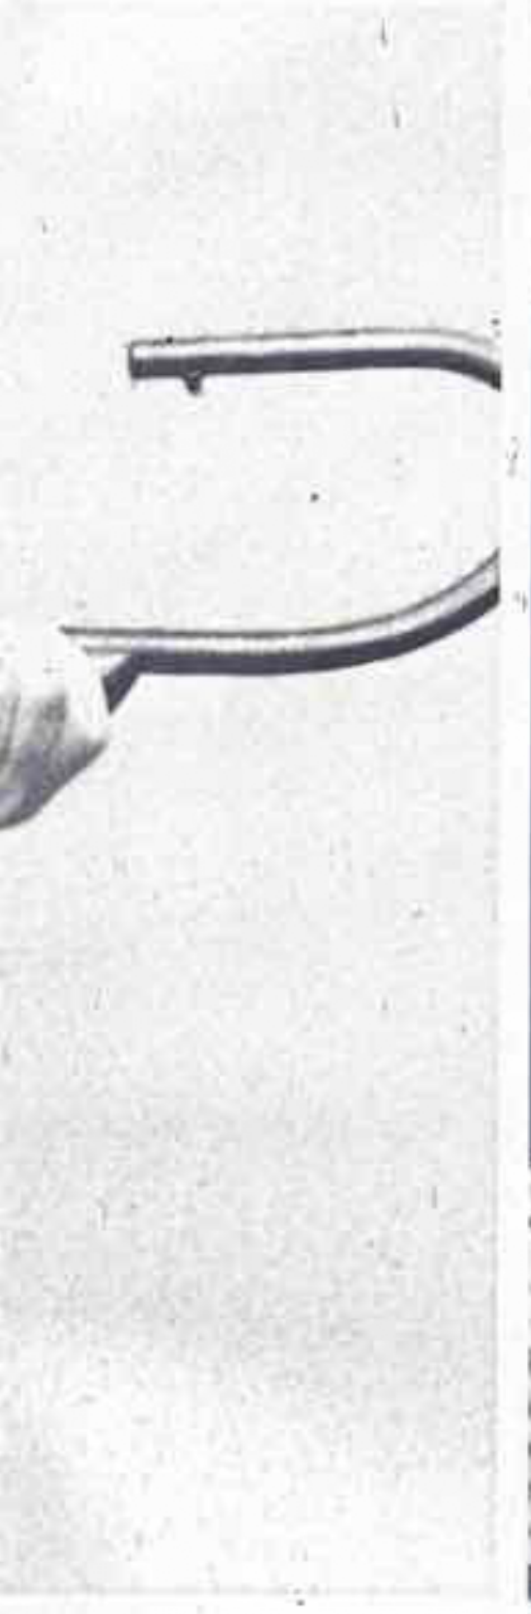
The gun, a Christmas present from an unidentified admirer, came complete with firing instructions that even a child could comprehend. Nixon, however, blew it, and went to Pat for advice. She took the gun from him just before this photo was taken!!!



Peace, through military might, was always a policy of the Nixon administration. Nixon, as you can see, was ever ready to back it up personally!

"Stop the war!" Jane Fonda commands a hapless Commander-In-Chief.

HIS NEW CAREER IS A MODEL OF VIRTUE!

"Now I want to make this perfectly clear," Nixon tells his model. "I am the painter!"

With nothing political to botch up, Nixon takes to whiling away the hours in his new pursuit: portrait painting.

TRICKY DICK, TRAPPED AT LAST!

Amidst rumors that Nixon had gone mad, promised to commit suicide, threatened to push the button that would blow up the world, this rare photograph clearly shows that he was really capable of only the above!

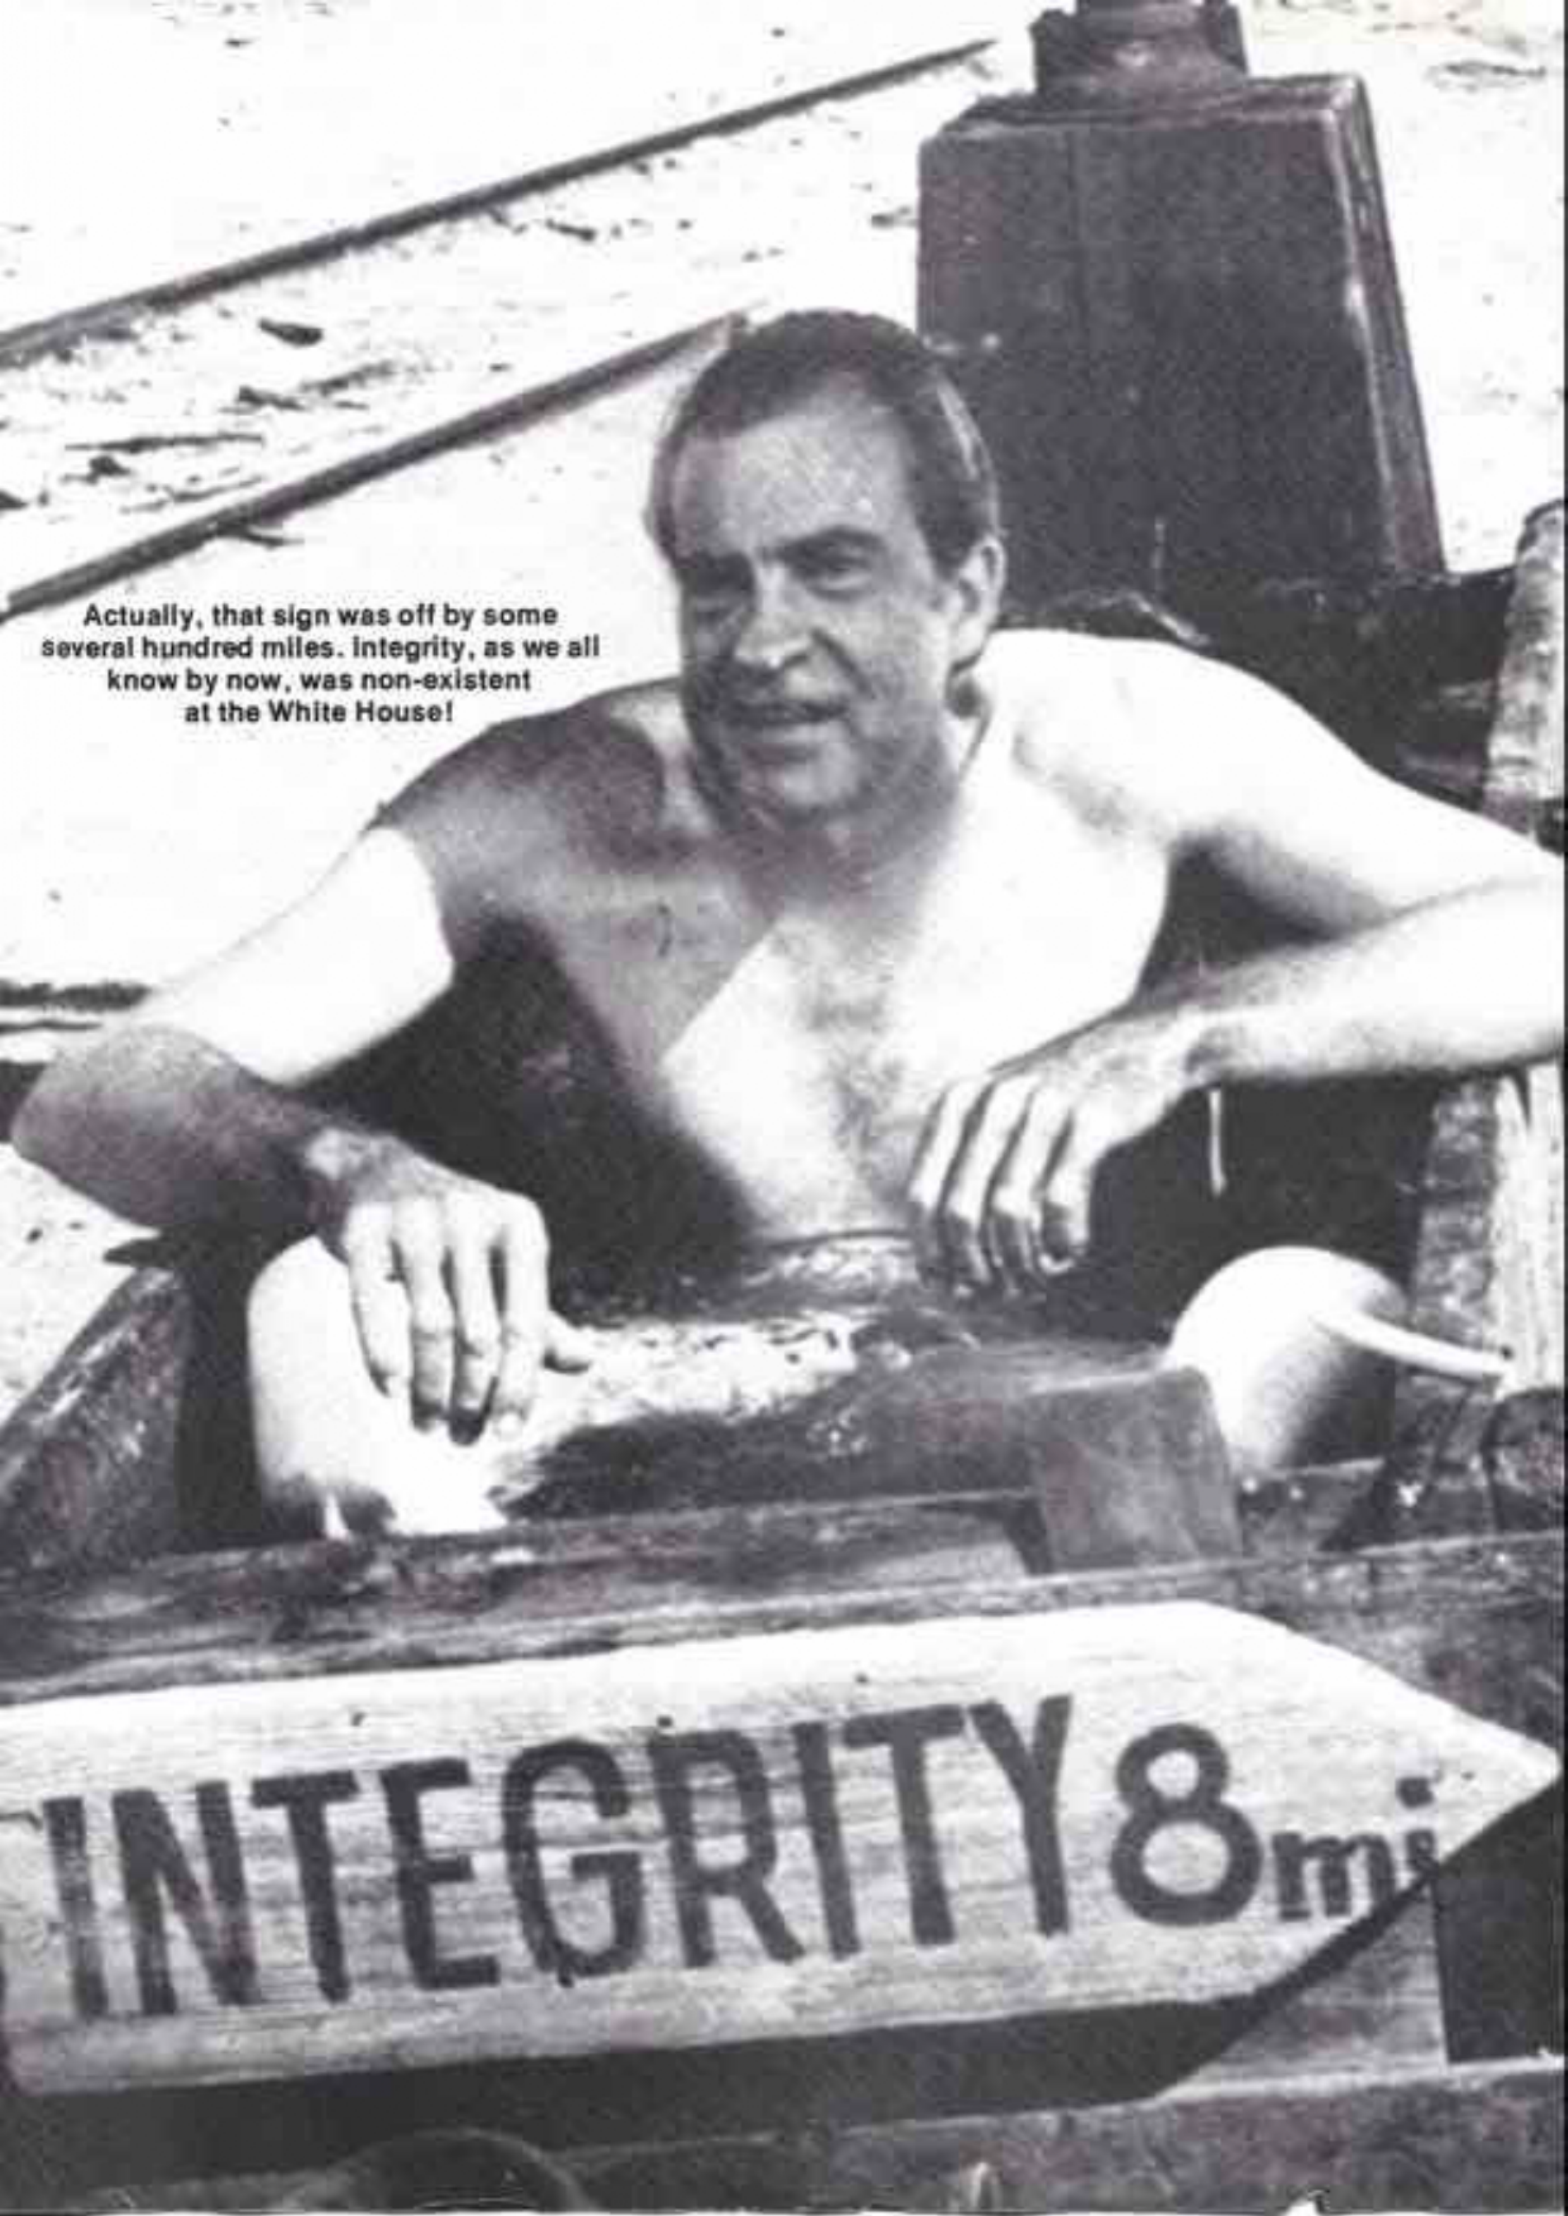
Well, there he is, head over heels intent on proving he can make as good an escape from this predicament as he did from the White House. A daring feat, no doubt, for the average Tom or Harry, but this Dick pulled it off with no problem.

WE WON'T HAVE HIM TO KICK AROUND ANYMORE!

Nixon was fit to be tied when he heard the Supreme Court ruled against his keeping the White House tapes. Friends rushed right over to prevent him from doing anything rash.



Actually, that sign was off by some several hundred miles. Integrity, as we all know by now, was non-existent at the White House!

Dick, Pat and Henry get together for a placard-carrying parade. They're his tapes, he insists, therefore he can do with them what he wants.
